

Antoine Grenier

Antoine has worked in tech, telecoms and aerospace for over 20 years in both mature and emerging markets, on commercial strategy, value creation plans, new technologies and product introductions, new ventures, partnerships, and corporate transactions. He has advised investors on M&A and financing of space and telecoms assets, and governments on regulation, and public policy.

Antoine has held senior leadership positions at Inmarsat (now Viasat), most recently helping it scale its connected aviation vertical, and previously worked for Deloitte, Orange, and HP Labs. Antoine holds an MBA, an MEng. in telecoms, and an MPhil. in computer science. He is also an alumni of the Financial Times non-executive director programme.